Mary had a little lamb, its fleece was white as snow; it strayed away one day, where lambs should never go. And Mary sat her quickly down and tears streamed from her eyes; she never found the lamb because she did not advertise. And Mary had a brother John who kept a village store; he sat him down and smoked a pipe, and watched the open door. And as the people passed along and did not stop to buy John still sat and smoked his pipe and blinked his sleepy eyes. And so the sheriff closed him out, but still he lingered near and Mary came to drop with him a sympathetic tear. How is it, sister, can you tell, why other merchants here, sell all their goods so readily and thrive from year to year. Remembering her own bad luck this little maid replied: "These other fellows got there, John, because they advertise."

The Sears and Yellow Leaf.

The forests about Hartford are now arrayed in their most stinging dress. There is beauty on every side, and it is richly varied. There are those whom only spring pleases, but they are easily satisfied. Then there is but one color, green, and now there is seen the effect of Nature's polychrome brush, and it lends the charm of variety and novelty and blended beauty indeed. At such a time it was that Bryant in his immortal "Thanatopsis" advised all to "go forth into the open air and list to Nature's teachings." Now is the time to go, just before the bleak days that are near at hand come with their "wailing winds and meadows brown and dead," marking the poet's melancholy days, the saddest of the year.
